Lynn school election snowed out

Council reschedules vote for Tuesday, March 21

By Thomas Grillo
ITEM STAFF

SALEM — As a late season blizzard threatens to shut down the Bay State with more than a foot of snow, today's high stakes election on funding two new middle schools has been postponed.

Essex Superior Court Judge Peter Lauriat issued the ruling on Monday in response to a request from the city. Less than three hours later, in an emergency meeting, the City Council moved the election to next Tuesday, March 21.

Lauriat approved a request by Richard Vitali, the city's assistant city solicitor, to delay the special election. While the city had hoped the judge would approve the March 21 date, Lauriat declined.

"The City Council set the date of the first vote, they should set the new one," Lauriat said from the bench. That set in motion a swift response from City Hall to call for an emergency council meeting

"I'm glad," said Mayor Judith Flanagan Kennedy. "I wanted to make sure we got into court today because it's becoming more and more evident that it would be a real public safety hazard to have people attempting to go out to vote in a storm like this."

Lynn students punching away at fitness

By Gayla Cawley

SAUGUS — About 40 Lynn Classical High School students took a brief reprieve from classes on Monday to roll with the punches at Title Boxing Club.

The physical education/health students ranged from ninth- to 12th-graders, and from all different fitness levels. When they arrived at the gym in Saugus for their one-hour boxing class, the teenagers had their hands wrapped to prep for the punching bag.

Colleen Peterson, a PE/Health teacher at Classical, said she thought the class would be a hit because there's interest in boxing at the school, and it's becoming a trend.

"We do a lot of fitness-based curriculum in our PE classes, so I feel like this is going to really complement it," Peterson said. "It's really for lifetime fitness, them seeing this as teenagers, because not everyone that's in PE right now is an athlete, so I feel like it's really going to give them exposure to life after high school sports and keeping in shape."

Peterson said she and the other PE teachers decided to put the idea out there and see if 50 kids would sign up. Forty signed up by the deadline last Friday. Title was doing the class for free, and students only had to pay for their hand wraps. The $10 sign-up fee included transportation by bus. Peterson said it was the first time she and the other PE teachers have done a field trip similar to the boxing class, and she was hoping to do it every semester if it went well.

Point of Pines prepares for pounding

With dangerous weather conditions expected during today's winter storm, many communities are taking precautions.

Current forecasts project 12-18 inches of snow across most of the state, high winds and coastal flooding. Snow is expected to fall at a rate of 2-4 inches per hour, causing whiteout conditions.

A snow emergency has been declared in Revere and a parking ban will start at 6 a.m. today. Revere Public Schools and all city offices will be closed.

Ward 5 city councilor John Powers, who represents many of the city's waterfront neighborhoods, said flooding typically depends on the tide.

"My understanding is that we're probably going to have a 13-foot tide (today) and that's above normal, but hopefully not too much above normal," Powers said.

A tide gate near the train tracks and a system that involves catch basins for storm water and two pump houses are in place to prevent flooding during large storms like today's, he said.

"Under normal conditions, the gate opens and closes automatically," Powers said. "It's closed now for the storm."

Group asks lawmakers to hold off on changes to state marijuana law

By Bob Salsberg
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The group behind a ballot initiative that legalized recreational marijuana in Massachusetts is now urging state legislators to keep the new law intact.

The appeal from Yes on 4 came one week before the Legislature's marijuana policy committee was scheduled to open public hearings on possible revisions to the law, which allows adults to possess an ounce or less of marijuana and grow up to a dozen pot plants in their homes.

Jim Borghesani, a spokesman for the group, accused policymakers of creating a "false narrative" around the notion that the voter-approved measure, as currently written, is flawed.

"The new law requires no legislative fixes," he said.

Before considering changes, Borghesani said, lawmakers should defer to the yet-to-be-appointed Cannabis Control Commission, a three-member panel that will serve as the regulatory body for recreational marijuana in the state. If necessary, the commission could later make recommendations to the Legislature for any changes, he added.

The Legislature has already voted to delay for six months several key deadlines contained in the law, including the original March 1 deadline for appointing the commission. The delay is likely to push the opening of the first retail pot shops in Massachusetts back to mid-2018 at the earliest.

Borghesani said Massachusetts is the only one of the eight states where recreational marijuana was approved by voters to delay the timetable for implementation or consider a significant overhaul.

Legislative leaders on Monday appeared unmoved by the group's plea to leave the law alone.

"It's not our intention to undermine the will of the voters, it's our intention to get it right," said Democratic Senate President Stan Rosenberg. His comments were echoed by Democratic House Speaker Robert DeLeo and Republican Gov. Charlie Baker, who shared advice offered by officials in states that previously legalized recreational pot.

"Almost to a person they said you should make sure you have enough time to set this thing up in such a way that you're not constantly chasing it," Baker said.

The legislative committee, chaired by Rep. Mark Cusack, of Braintree, and Sen. Patricia Jehlen, of Somerville, could explore a number of changes including an increase in taxes. The law currently calls for a 3.75 percent excise on marijuana sales, applied on top of the state's regular 6.25 percent sales tax and a 2 percent local-option tax.

Critics have questioned whether the tax would generate enough revenue to cover the cost of regulating the drug.

MBTA weighs ending weekend commuter rail service for year

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority is considering eliminating weekend commuter rail service for a year to help close a $42 million budget gap.

The Boston Globe reports the transportation agency is also considering ending thousands of door-to-door rides for disabled passengers for a year.

Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack said cuts are needed to help stabilize the MBTA's finances.

Gov. Charlie Baker described the proposal as a "menu of options."

The proposal is expected to meet resistance from riders, including advocates for the disabled who rely on the paratransit service known as the Ride.

The service is mandated by the federal government, but the MBTA goes beyond that requirement.

The proposal would eliminate those additional rides.

Company to pay $1.8M to settle claims of overbilling

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of Justice says a Massachusetts company has agreed to pay $1.8 million to settle claims it overbilled the federal government.

Charles River Laboratories International Inc. was accused of violating the False Claims Act on contracts with the National Institutes of Health.

The company holds contracts for services related to the development, maintenance and distribution of colonies of animals, and the provision of laboratory animals. It's headquartered in Wilmington.

The Justice Department says the firm billed for labor and associated costs of employees at facilities in Raleigh, N.C., and Kingston, N.Y., but these employees didn't render the services claimed.

The company discovered the problem in a small subset of its contracts and told the government about it. It says it has cooperated to ensure proper repayment and resolution.

Lynn police searching for robbery suspect

By Gayla Cawley
ITEM STAFF

LYNN — Police say a 32-year-old Lynn woman was robbed Monday morning in front of Cobbet Elementary School.

Police responded to the robbery shortly after 11 a.m. and met with the victim, who said she was walking on Franklin Street toward the Commons. When she was walking in front of the school, she told police a man walked toward her, Lynn Police Lt. Rick Donnelly said.

As the suspect was about to pass her, he violently pulled off the backpack the woman was wearing and knocked her down in the process, Donnelly said.

The backpack reportedly contained $200 in cash, personal papers and credit cards. The man ran through the Cobbet parking lot and took off with the bag toward the Commons, Donnelly said.

The incident is under investigation and no arrests have been made. Police described the suspect as a black man in his mid-30s and about 5 feet 7 inches. He was wearing a hoodie at the time.

Healthy competition in Swampscott for seat

By Gayla Cawley
ITEM STAFF

SWAMPSCOTT — The chairwoman of the Board of Health will face a challenge to retain her seat in the April 25 local election.

Martha Dansill is running for a fourth, three-year term against Emily Cilley, a registered nurse and political newcomer.

The deadline to return nomination papers was March 7, and both candidates will appear on the ballot, according to Town Clerk Susan Duplin.

Dansill served as executive director of HealthLink, a North Shore environmental nonprofit organization, for 12 years and is now on its Board of Directors. She said the group was focused on a Salem coal burning power plant when it was in operation, striving for clean air policies. She's also worked as a coach for Weight Watchers.

Cilley, 47, is a registered nurse who has served in numerous other public health positions across the North Shore. She works for Northeast Clinical Services and with people in their homes. She also works as a substitute nurse in the town. She has lived in Swampscott for 20 years.

She holds a degree in Health and Family Life from the University of Maine. She and her husband, Charlie, have four daughters in the Swampscott school system.

Dansill said serving on the health board, a regulatory three-member board which is a local arm of the Department of Public Health and Department of Environmental Protection, for three terms has given her a wealth of knowledge. She said she's a proponent of reaching out to educate the community on new public health issues as they arise.

She said the board implemented a waste reduction program that also increased recycling. Dansill said that saved the town $90,000 annually over the pre-waste reduction program.

The board also works to keep the town's beaches and oceans clean, Dansill said, citing work done to make the waters from Swampscott to Revere a "no discharge zone," after petitioning the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency eight years ago.

She said a member of the health board also serves on the town's Overdose Response Team, adding that opioid abuse and addiction is a key problem many communities are dealing with now.

Dansill has an undergraduate degree from Springfield College. She has been married to her husband, Terry, for 32 years and has two children, Emily and Peter, who attended Swampscott Public Schools.

"Over the years, I have developed a wealth of knowledge in regards to local and state policy that protect the public health and the environment," Dansill said. "I'm just really proud to serve the people of Swampscott in this capacity."

Cilley in a phone interview said she would focus on the youth and elderly in town, and also on the opioid crisis. While she understands the trash and recycling issues are important, and she is certainly for open space, she said that wouldn't be where her focus is.

The nurse said she's not trying to replace anybody, but feels that new eyes and ears are always a good thing, along with forward thinking. She said she has a passion for health issues and thought it was the right time to run.

"As a health professional, my patients' well-being — physical, mental, emotional, social — are the reasons I come to work every day," Cilley said in a separate statement. "This 360-degree view of health is important, and the reason I decided to run."

"Swampscott faces a number of health issues: rising opioid casualties, storm-water and sewage contamination, trash and recycling pickup costs, and the need for open space to accommodate active town residents, whatever their age of interests," Cilley said. "I believe the board of health can do better on each and every one of these issues."

"I will work to show a greater presence in the town — specifically with youth and the elderly — from acknowledging and illustrating safe behaviors to working with committees, boards and groups for greater inclusion of all our town's resources as they relate to our residents."

Baker: Keeping uninsured rate low is key

By Steve LeBlanc
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Gov. Charlie Baker says he wants to make sure Massachusetts continues to maintain a health care system that has delivered insurance to about 97 percent of its residents.

The Republican governor made his comments Monday after the release of a Congressional Budget Office report that found 14 million Americans would lose coverage next year under legislation proposed by House Republicans. The number could jump to 24 million by 2026.

The GOP proposal relies in part on cuts to the federal-state Medicaid program, forcing states to pick up the tab.

Baker, a former health care executive, says federal Medicaid dollars are critical to helping insure Massachusetts residents. He says the state receives about $10.5 billion in federal Medicaid reimbursement each year, a little more than half of the state's total $19 billion in Medicaid spending.

"Delivering virtually universal access to coverage for the people of Massachusetts has been a good thing, and it's been supported here by Democrats, Republicans, the business community, the provider community and the insurance community, and it's very important to us that we continue our ability to do that," Baker said.

Baker said he hadn't had a chance to review the Congressional Budget Office report but hopes to in the next day or two.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren took to Twitter on Monday and vowed to fight the Republican plan. "Throwing 24 million people off their health care to give billionaires a tax break is heartless & irresponsible. We cannot pass #Trumpcare," the Massachusetts Democrat tweeted, adding "MA residents have been writing, calling, emailing me - deeply worried about their health care. And they have every right to be worried."

Any reduction in federal reimbursements could make it difficult for Massachusetts to maintain its comparatively generous eligibility and benefit standards for MassHealth, its Medicaid program, which provides coverage for almost 1.9 million residents.

Just before the November election, Democratic

President Barack Obama's administration approved for Massachusetts a five-year, $52.4 billion Medicaid waiver, which Baker said would allow MassHealth to transition from a fee-based system to one that promotes more coordinated and cost-efficient care for patients.

In January, Baker sent a letter to House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy, R-California, urging his fellow Republicans to keep key parts of the federal law, including letting Massachusetts keep its mandate that all residents have health insurance.

Partners' disservice to Lynn

Remember last year when Partners HealthCare promised to spend $180 million to expand and improve Salem Hospital while they close Union Hospital? The plan they described to the Lynn and Salem communities, as well as state licensing agencies, proposed a new, state-of-the-art, consolidated hospital located in Salem to better meet the needs of residents of Lynn, a population Partners described as having serious health needs.

In July 2016, the state approved Partners' plan to add desperately-needed psychiatric beds, add 48 new private rooms, expand and improve the Emergency Department, and finally construct a coherent common entrance to Salem Hospital.

Less than three months later, Partners changed its plans, claiming the changes were necessary because Salem Hospital is losing money. But the plan they had already presented to the state last July included an analysis of these losses, with the claim that closing Union and making the improvements to Salem would improve the hospital's financial position.

Partners isn't claiming that medical needs have changed. They still plan to close Union Hospital; however, now they will only add 24 beds to replace the 128 beds at Union. Anyone who has spent any time in the Emergency Department lately knows how long waits are to get a bed, and chances are good that bed will be found in a double or quad, despite Partners arguing this summer that private rooms are better.

Partners is breaking its promises to Lynn, risking the health of our residents and betraying our community. Partners is the largest and richest medical organization in Massachusetts. According to their most recent state charitable reporting, in the past three years their total assets have increased by $1 billion each year. They have over $4 billion in unrestricted assets. Their CEO's annual pay is over $2 million annually. They just spent $465 million on building new corporate offices in Somerville. Yet they say they can't afford to keep their promises while the Lynn/Salem area has the greatest unmet healthcare needs of any of Partners' 10 hospitals.

As most people know, Lynn used to have two hospitals: Lynn Hospital, closed in the 1990s, and Union Hospital. When Union closes, Salem Hospital will have to meet the needs of Lynn's diverse population. Partners claims that Salem Hospital (NSMC) is losing too much money to allow the investment in its infrastructure that it promised a few short months ago.

But why is NSMC losing so much money? Partners chose to transfer profitable services out of our area, leaving the low-margin services in Lynn and Salem. In addition to building the Ambulatory Care Center in Danvers, Partners recently moved cardiac surgery to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Partners is a non-profit charity that has a mission to serve patients who need care, regardless of whether they are wealthy, have good insurance or need profitable medical services. Partners claims that its mission is to provide "high-quality care closer to home for patients and their families in a lower cost community-based setting." But their actions run contrary to their lofty statements. With insufficient beds on the North Shore, patients will be forced to higher cost hospitals in Boston, increasing health care costs for everyone.

Breaking new ground for vets

Peabody deserves praise for Veterans Services Director Stephen Patten's initiative to provide free legal services for men and women who served their country.

Porcello Law Offices in Salem is Peabody's new partner in a campaign to help veterans and their families navigate the legal system. The effort to connect veterans with the legal help they need starts with a Porcello attorney spending two days a month at the Torigian Community Life Center, a Peabody location that counts many veterans among its residents.

The legal aid program represents a progressive approach by Patten and the city to reach out to veterans and it is a tribute to Porcello, a firm founded by a veteran.

Patten's initiative mirrors the collaboration by Lynn doctors and the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs to ensure local veterans have a convenient local source for medical care. Instead of driving to a Veterans Affairs hospital out of town, veterans can get health care in the local Boston Street clinic.

The facility is an enduring tribute to former U.S. Rep. John Tierney, who fought to get federal money for the clinic after vowing he would ensure no veteran living in the Sixth Congressional District had to travel more than 15 miles from home to receive care.

U.S. Rep. Seth Moulton has worked to provide support for the clinic and fellow veterans who use its services, including mental health counseling and other help available in part through interactive technology connecting the clinic with other medical offices.

Patten's efforts and the Lynn clinic's success buttresses work by the Lynn Housing Authority and Neighborhood Development to end homelessness among local veterans. Combine these efforts with strong commitments to veterans in surrounding communities, including Saugus, Swampscott and Revere, then it is clear strong potential exists to do more for veterans.

This potential is only limited by the imagination and drive of veterans old and young, women and men, representing the full spectrum of veterans.

New efforts on the part of veterans can begin with Moulton obtaining the federal resources needed to conduct a valuable "hyper survey" of Lynn area and North Shore veterans. This study can assess in detail and accurately gauge the needs and challenges facing veterans.

So much more can be done on behalf of veterans. Lynn English High School's Marine Corps Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadets can be harnessed to provide services to veterans beyond the good work the students already perform under Sgt. Major Ken Oswald's leadership.

Older veterans need companionship assistance and there is a historic need for young people to assist in oral history projects aimed at preserving the memories and experiences of the few remaining World War II veterans as well as Korean War veterans.

There is also a compelling need for younger veterans to have opportunities to define and shape the services and assistance they need. They can work with Moulton, Patten and other veterans affairs experts, including Lynn Veterans Service Director Michael Sweeney, to outline long-range veterans assistance plans.

Veterans have done their share for their country. But the work to be done on their behalf is just beginning.

Thanks for food

To the Editor:

I would like to thank Catholic Charities, the Rev. Brian Flynn and all volunteers providing food once a month to low-income people, including many who work but still need extra help.

Even on a freezing day, volunteers are still in St. Mary's parking lot passing out food. Salvation Army, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church and St. Vincent de Paul Society are all very helpful. It is a sin that food is wasted when hundreds of people are in need of food and clothing.

This guy's supposed to make us great again?

WASHINGTON — It is becoming increasingly apparent that Donald Trump bluffed his way through the presidential campaign.

He really didn't have a clue what it would take to run the country. But making it up as he went, he vowed to fix everything from immigration and health care to infrastructure and the tax system. At the same time, he said he'd increase defense spending and build a multibillion-dollar wall to keep us safe from immigrants.

He sold the snake oil, and enough Americans bought it — particularly in the Midwest — to see him into the Oval Office despite the fact it was obvious he failed the qualifying test on almost every level, including temperamentally.

"Nobody knew that health care could be so complicated," he said the other day, confirming a remarkable lack of understanding, particularly for a businessman, of one of the nation's thorniest issues. His lack of competence is particularly troubling as the war heats up over the GOP's determination to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act. One must wonder whether he has even read the bill that became the law popularly known as Obamacare. Probably not, as he is reported to read very little.

Now it seems he is being sold by some around him on universal health care, which the nation has largely avoided for decades because it is seen, whether accurately or not, as inordinately expensive, inefficient, and socialistic, if not downright communistic. Clearly, a quick repeal of the ACA is not in Trump's tarot cards, with conservative members of his own party in Congress seeking a total annihilation of the program and Democrats opposing most of the replacement proposals. Also, it didn't help that industry groups representing everyone from doctors to hospitals to seniors find the latest plans unsuitable.

More disturbing perhaps is that at times, his obvious narcissistic tendencies have gotten out of control to the point that his mental stability could be called into question. That may seem harsh. But his unsubstantiated wiretapping claims and other distortions appear out of the norm, especially for a person of his rank. To accuse his predecessor in the White House of tapping his phones in the Trump Towers without offering a shred of evidence is beyond rational. In addition to unequivocal denials by Barack Obama, the entire present and past intelligence from the CIA to the FBI say it isn't true.

Trump's leading advisors tried valiantly to back him up without much success. It must have been embarrassing for them, but then again, after a pattern of this kind of strange behavior, they must be getting used to it. Either they need their jobs (after all, he is the guy who used to go on television and tell people they were fired), or they are convinced he knows something they don't.

One keeps hoping that he will reach some sort of reasonable equilibrium, but every time it seems he is on the verge of calming down, an early morning Twitter post appears to jar one out of that illusion. He can't seem to resist taking positions or making statements that undercut his own legitimacy.

"I love WikiLeaks," he said during the campaign when leaks targeted Hillary Clinton. One can only wonder what he thinks now that the intelligence apparatus his administration oversees suddenly has become a WikiLeaks' victim. The president has been curiously silent about the damage done to the nation's security by the latest revelations about the CIA's eavesdropping abilities.

Perhaps, but just perhaps, the nitty gritty of the daily search for enough money to support his ambitious initiatives — a hugely difficult task without wrecking the Treasury more than it already is — and his remaking government through executive orders will keep him so busy he won't have time to embarrass himself or his office with almost unimaginable utterings, allegations and nonsense. But that has not been his method of operation most of his adult life.

The betting probably should be that this is a president who believes in his own infallibility to the point of concern and is incapable of change despite his pledge to make over the lives of the rest of us.

Point of Pines in Revere prepares for pounding

SNOW
From A1

Rice Avenue residents Nicole Capozzi and Richie Sarro said their home hasn't been flooded in years. Howling winds, however, are another issue.

"The wind here is very, very strong," said Capozzi. "It's very loud. During the last storm, I looked out the window and the grill was in the neighbor's yard."

To prepare for storms, they move their lawn furniture and grill to an alcove where it's protected from the wind.

Sarro, who grew up in the Point of Pines neighborhood, said he believes the addition of dune grass helps keep the flood water at bay.

"Years ago, I was here during the 1978 storm," he said. "I remember my mom was putting on her makeup. I looked out the window and there was a wall of water coming down the road. There was a helicopter on the roof asking 'are you people alright?' and I remember holding the dog. But we haven't had anything like that in a long time."

Cheryl Rebholz, a Rice Avenue resident, said she hasn't had water in her basement for a few years, but still errs on the side of caution.

"We checked the pump in our basement yesterday," Rebholz said. "All we can do is hope for the best."

A list of emergency arteries can be found on the Revere Police Department's website. Cars parked on the emergency roads will be towed. The MBTA Wonderland Garage will be available to residents who don't have off-street parking for a $5 rate from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.

In a statement, The Revere Department of Public Works, Police Department and Mayor Brian Arrigo's office asked residents to avoid travel. In addition to high rates of snow, MEMA has advised residents to be aware of the potential for coastal flooding, particularly during high tide at 1:29 p.m.

The city advised residents of the Beachmont, Point of Pines and Oak Island neighborhoods to be cautious.

A parking ban in Lynn began at midnight and all Lynn Public Schools are closed today, according to the city's website.

All cars are required to be removed from the city's streets and sidewalks until the ban is lifted. Residents without off-street parking can use the school's parking lots starting at 5 p.m. on Monday.

Parking is also available at the Ellis Street Municipal lot on the School Street side and at the MBTA parking garage at Broad and Market Streets.

Trash and recycling will not be collected today. Collection will run on a one-day delay for the remainder of the week.

An emergency parking ban went into effect in Peabody at 3 a.m. today. During a snow emergency, blue lights on the city's traffic poles will flash, indicating that parking on the streets is prohibited.

For residents who do not have off-street parking, alternative parking options may be available. For more information, contact 978-538-6312.

Peabody Public Schools, City Hall and other municipal offices are closed today.

Saugus Public Schools are also closed.

Saugus will have a parking ban, effective today at 6 a.m., until 8 a.m. on Wednesday morning. Motor vehicles must be moved from streets in order for the town to have roadways cleared, plowed, salted and sanded for public safety and emergency vehicle access. Any vehicles remaining on the streets may be ticketed and towed, according to Town Manager Scott Crabtree.

Parking is available in the Saugus High School lot, located at 1 Pearce Memorial Drive. The upper lot on the left has been designated as parking space for emergency overflow parking.

Crabtree said he's urging residents to be safe and to check on family members and neighbors during the storm.

Trash and recycling collection will be delayed by one day from Wednesday through Saturday, March 18. Residents can contact solid waste and recycling coordinator Lorna Cerbone at 781-231-4036 for more information.

Trash pickup is canceled in Marblehead, Peabody, Swampscott and Lynnfield today. In Revere, collection will begin early at 5 a.m. and remain on schedule throughout the week.

The town of Nahant has a winter parking ban that extends from Dec. 21 to March 20. The ban prohibits on-street parking from midnight until 6 a.m. Residents can apply for a parking waiver to be exempt from the ban.

In the event of a snow emergency, all cars must be removed from the street, including those with a parking waiver, or they will be ticketed and towed at the owner's expense.

The Johnson Elementary School is closed.

A parking ban, beginning at 6 a.m. on Tuesday, will last for 24 hours in Swampscott, according to Department of Public Works director Gino Cresta.

Swampscott Public Schools and Swampscott Town Hall are closed.

School is canceled in Lynnfield. The town will follow its normal winter parking ban, which prohibits cars from being parked on the road from 1 a.m. to 7 a.m.

Keolis Commuter Services, operator of the MBTA Commuter Rail, said Monday that it will be operating at "Blue" level of service today. This means the normal weekday commuter rail schedule will be reduced by one-third and express trains will make local stops. Passengers should expect delays of between 15 and 25 minutes across the system.

"Extremely fast snowfall rates will create dangerous roadway conditions and we urge everyone to be prepared to stay off the roads, take public transit if necessary and work from home if possible," said Gov. Charlie Baker in a statement.

Congress' analyst: Millions to lose coverage under GOP bill

By Alan Fram
and Ricardo
Alonso-Zaldivar
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Fourteen million Americans would lose coverage next year under House Republican legislation remaking the nation's health care system, and that number would balloon to 24 million by 2026, Congress' budget analysts projected Monday. Their report deals a stiff blow to a GOP drive already under fire from both parties and large segments of the medical industry.

The Congressional Budget Office report undercuts a central argument President Donald Trump and Republicans have cited for swiftly rolling back the 2010 health care overhaul: that the insurance markets created under that statute are "a disaster" and about to implode. The congressional experts said the market for individual policies "would probably be stable in most areas under either current law or the (GOP) legislation."

The report also flies in the face of Trump's talk of "insurance for everybody," which he stated in January. He has since embraced a less expansive goal — to "increase access" — advanced by House Speaker Paul Ryan and other Republicans.

Health secretary Tom Price told reporters at the White House the report was "simply wrong" and he disagreed "strenuously," saying it omitted the impact of additional GOP legislation and regulatory changes the Trump administration plans.

In a signal of trouble, Rep. Mark Walker, R-N.C., leader of a large group of House conservatives, said the report "does little to alleviate" concerns about the bill including tax credits considered too costly.

The budget office's estimates provide a detailed, credible appraisal of the Republican effort to unravel former President Barack Obama's 2010 overhaul. The office has a four-decade history of even-handedness and is currently headed by an appointee recommended by Price when he was a congressman. Trump has repeatedly attacked the agency's credibility, citing its significant underestimate of the number of people who would buy insurance on state and federal exchanges under "Obamacare."

On the plus side for Republicans, the budget office said the GOP measure would reduce federal deficits by $337 billion over the coming decade. That's largely because it would cut the federal-state Medicaid program for low-income Americans and eliminate subsidies that Obama's law provides to millions of people who buy coverage.

Justice Department asks for more time on wiretapping evidence

By Julie Pace and Deb Riechmann

WASHINGTON — Facing a Monday deadline, the Justice Department asked lawmakers for more time to provide evidence backing up President Donald Trump's unproven assertion that his predecessor wiretapped his New York skyscraper during the election. The request came as the White House appeared to soften Trump's explosive allegation.

The House intelligence committee said it would give the Justice Department until March 20 to comply with the evidence request. That's the date of the committee's first open hearing on the investigation into Russia's interference in the 2016 election and possible contacts between Trump associates and Russia.

A spokesman for the committee's Republican chairman said that if the Justice Department doesn't meet the new deadline, the panel might use its subpoena power to gather information.

"If the committee does not receive a response by then, the committee will ask for this information during the March 20 hearing and may resort to a compulsory process if our questions continue to go unanswered," said Jack Langer, a spokesman for Rep. Devin Nunes, R-Calif.

Trump's assertions have put his administration in a bind. Current and former administration officials have been unable to provide any evidence of the Obama administration wiretapping Trump Tower, yet the president's aides have been reluctant to publicly contradict their boss.

MASSACHUSETTS BRIEFS

Jury indicts teen accused of beheading classmate

BOSTON (AP) — A Massachusetts teenager accused of killing a high school classmate whose headless body was found near a river has been indicted.

The Essex County District Attorney's Office says a grand jury indicted 16-year-old Mathew Borges for first-degree murder Monday.

The body of 16-year-old Lee Manuel Vitoria-Paulino was found near a river in Lawrence in December by a woman walking her dog. Police recovered his head nearby.

Both boys attended Lawrence High School. Borges said in a police report that they had gone to smoke marijuana together on Nov. 18, then parted ways.

But the report also said Borges told a witness that he had "stabbed a kid and cut his head off killing him."

His lawyer couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

Borges is expected to be arraigned March 31.

Irish prime minister visits Massachusetts State House

BOSTON (AP) — Irish Taoiseach Enda Kenny and Irish Ambassador to the United States Anne Anderson have met with top politicians in Massachusetts.

Gov. Charlie Baker and Lt. Gov. Karyn Polito greeted them on the Statehouse steps Monday morning, accompanied by pipes and drums.

Kenny — Ireland's prime minister — also discussed immigration with Boston Mayor Marty Walsh at City Hall. Kenny touted the contributions Irish immigrants have made to Boston and U.S. history.

Kenny was also scheduled to visit the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum in Boston to discuss the Irish-U.S. relationship and key issues for Ireland in the new millennium. Kennedy was America's first Irish-Catholic president.

Kenny was expected in Providence Tuesday but the event was canceled because of the storm.

Later in the week, he's scheduled to visit the White House.

Warren surveying groups that offer addiction treatment

BOSTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren is surveying dozens of Massachusetts groups that treat people struggling with addiction.

Warren said the survey of more than 70 organizations that provide behavioral health treatment and recovery services for patients suffering from substance use will help determine the challenges facing those groups.

The Massachusetts

Democrat said Monday she hopes to use the information to push for more federal funding for the health care providers.

Warren says that providing "adequate funding for access to quality behavioral health services should not be a partisan fight."

Warren said the survey will ask about a range of topics, including patient access, treatment services, insurance coverage and health care financing for patients.

There were 1,465 confirmed opioid-related deaths in Massachusetts last year, with another 469 to 562 suspected overdose deaths.

St. Patrick's parade marshal says he's back on board

BOSTON (AP) — The chief marshal of Boston's St. Patrick's Day parade says he's back on board now that parade organizers have voted to allow a group of gay veterans to participate.

Dan Magoon said Monday that in addition to resuming the ceremonial role, he will march Sunday with OutVets.

Magoon said last week he wouldn't participate this year after the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council voted to exclude OutVets over the use of the rainbow symbol, a sign of gay unity.

After outcry, the council reversed course Friday.

Magoon, a South Boston native and Army veteran who served in Iraq and Afghanistan, says allowing OutVets to march creates a "promising future."

He is the executive director of Massachusetts Fallen Heroes, a nonprofit that honors fallen military personnel and helps their families.

New England Aquarium names interim CEO

BOSTON (AP) — The New England Aquarium has named a longtime board member and senior financial services executive to be its interim president and chief executive.

The aquarium on Monday announced that Maliz Beams takes over starting April 1.

She replaces Nigella Hillgarth, who is returning to academia and will be leaving at the end of the month.

Beams, who brings extensive leadership experience and skills from the financial services industry to the position, has been a member of the aquarium's board since 2010. She is currently a trustee and chair of the finance committee.

One of Beams' first tasks is addressing the aquarium's ongoing discussions with the city, state, and developer concerning the redevelopment of the Harbor Garage site.

Police arrest man on drug charges

By Gayla Cawley

LYNN — A Chelsea man was arrested on drug charges Monday morning after police found more than $500 in cash and 50 alprazolam pills on him without a prescription.

Juan Osorio, 33, was charged with Class C drug possession with intent to distribute.

Shortly before 10:30 a.m., police saw a man, later identified as Osorio, get into the passenger's seat of a car in the parking lot of 420 Essex St. The car briefly drove up the street and came back to the area, at the opposite side of the street from the parking lot. As Osorio started to get out of the car, officers conducted a traffic stop on the vehicle, Lynn Police Lt. Rick Donnelly said.

Donnelly said lots of drug transactions go on right by the barber shop at 420 Essex St. During the traffic stop, one officer went up to the driver's side, while another went to the passenger's side where Osorio was sitting. Police noticed Osorio was fidgety and wouldn't take his hands out of his pockets. When he did take his hands out of his pockets, Osorio allegedly pulled out two large wads of cash, totaling $509, Donnelly said.

Osorio put his hands back into his pockets and when he pulled them out again, police saw a plastic bag containing 50 pills. He told police they were totem (pole) pills, like valium, for personal use, but he didn't have a prescription for them. The pills were alprazolam, Donnelly said.

The drug goes by the brand names of Xanax or Niravam, which treats anxiety, and also has a sedating effect. Police took possession of the pills and arrested Osorio.

The driver of the car, a 46-year-old woman from Lynn, didn't know the passenger in her vehicle, Osorio's name, and told police she was just going to give him a ride to Walgreens. But police said the car was only gone for a minute and then pulled back up near the Essex Street parking lot.

Police believe that Osorio was trying to sell the woman Class C drugs, but she denied everything, and they let her drive away, Donnelly said.

A search warrant was executed at the residence of Nestor Rivera, 31, of 242 Lantern Road, Apt. 33, after a joint investigation between Revere and Everett police, Revere Police Lt. Det. John Goodwin said.

Man charged with heroin possession in Lynn

LYNN — A Lynn man was arrested after police found 16 bags of heroin in the sock he was wearing on Friday night.

Bolivar Jaquez, 34, was charged with heroin possession with intent to distribute and a drug violation near a school.

Police were driving on

Park Street around 6:30 p.m. when they saw a man on a bike, later identified as Jaquez, at the passenger's side of a "waiting vehicle." Jaquez allegedly leaned into the car and reached in for what the officers thought was a drug transaction, Lynn Police Lt. Rick Donnelly said.

Jaquez rode past the police cruiser and the car drove away. Officers drove around the block and couldn't find the car, but they saw Jaquez on the bike at the corner of Park Street and Western Avenue and went over to talk to him, Donnelly said.

When police asked Jaquez what he was doing before, he allegedly told them he was talking to a friend at work, pulled a folded $100 bill out his pocket and showed it the officers. Police then saw a knife clipped to his front pant pocket, which put him in violation of the city knife ordinance, Donnelly said.

Police searched Jaquez for further weapons and checked him for warrants. During the pat down, police felt a bulge in his left sock, which turned out to be a plastic bag containing 16 individually packaged bags of heroin, Donnelly said.

He was charged with intent to distribute because of the large amount of heroin found. In addition, during the interaction with police, Jaquez' cell phone was ringing the entire time, and he has a history of drug distribution, Donnelly said. The cash, phone and drugs were seized.

Malden's Winslow enters the race for City Council

Sea group will seek one of the three at large seats on the 11-member body, which also features eight ward councilors,

Winslow, in a campaign statement, detailed his background and described himself as a well-rounded, committed local citizen who has immersed in Malden community concerns focused on education, community development, land use and preservation and an inclusive and accessible municipal government.

"I want to be a progressive, community-focused voice on the council," he said. "As someone who cares deeply about the city that has been my home for 28 years, I want to use my experience and skills to move Malden forward."

Winslow, a senior project manager for the city of Gloucester responsible for planning, funding and building community development projects, added, "Smart development will be one key focus of my work — including affordable housing, effective public transportation and a safe environment for people who drive, bike or walk."

He served on the committee from 2007 to 2013 and said he is well aware of the importance of the city's school system and the challenges it faces.

"Public education is a critically important part of our city and our democracy," Winslow said in his statement. "I am fully aware of the practical challenges our schools face. I will continue to work hard for equitable funding, smaller class sizes, strong leadership and the best education we can provide for all of our children."

Winslow is perhaps best known for the nearly 25 years he has been actively involved in Bike to the Sea, a nonprofit organization "which has worked since 1993 to make the Northern Strand Community Trail and Bikeway Community Garden a reality."

An extensive, paved bicycle path now exists that runs from Everett through the heart of Malden due to the efforts of Bike to the Sea and there are ongoing efforts to extend the path.

"My experience — as an attorney, community development project maner and School Committee member — have given me a profound appreciation for what we can accomplish when we work together," Winslow said.

He wants to be in the forefront of supporting inclusiveness and accessibility locally.

"Malden's diverse mix of residents enriches our city, generating enormous potential for creative ideas and innovative solutions. I plan to tap into this potential in ways that benefit everyone. I will be a champion for every Malden resident and neighborhood and will ensure that residents have a strong voice in key decision-making processes," he said.

Winslow is the second candidate to make a formal announcement of a campaign for one of the three councilor at large seats, joining incumbent Councilor at large Debbie DeMaria, who announced she would seek re-election earlier this year.

Fellow incumbent councilors at large David D'Arcangelo and Craig Spadafora, the longest-serving member on the council, have not formally announced their intentions for this fall's election, but they are both expected to seek re-election this year.

Lynn students punch away at fitness

BOXING
From A1

"It gives them a great cross-training experience," said Joan Wiendczak, a PE teacher. "We don't want them to do the same exercise everyday because your body gets used to that. Enabling them to do something like this will cross-train them and use new muscles that perhaps they weren't using before, and get them out and doing something that would interest them that they otherwise wouldn't be exposed to."

Wiendczak said the boxing class takes on all fitness levels. She said the whole idea was to get the students to move around and strengthen, so their fitness level continues to go up.

"I just thought it was interesting," said Eric Lluveres, 18, a senior, about why he wanted to take the class. "I used to box before and I thought it was a good opportunity to get back into it."

Eric Lopez, 18, a senior, said he came for the experience. He said he has boxed a little bit before, but nothing too serious.

When asked if it provided a nice break from the school day, he said, "It's not every day you get to come to the gym like this and box."

Senior Gilley Kabamba, 18, also thought the class would be interesting and was hoping to learn.

Junior Julie Mejia, 18, signed up because she thought the class looked exciting and to get a good workout.

Shakia Warner, 17, a junior, said she usually boxes at home.

"I box all the time with my dad, so I guess I just like boxing," Warner said.

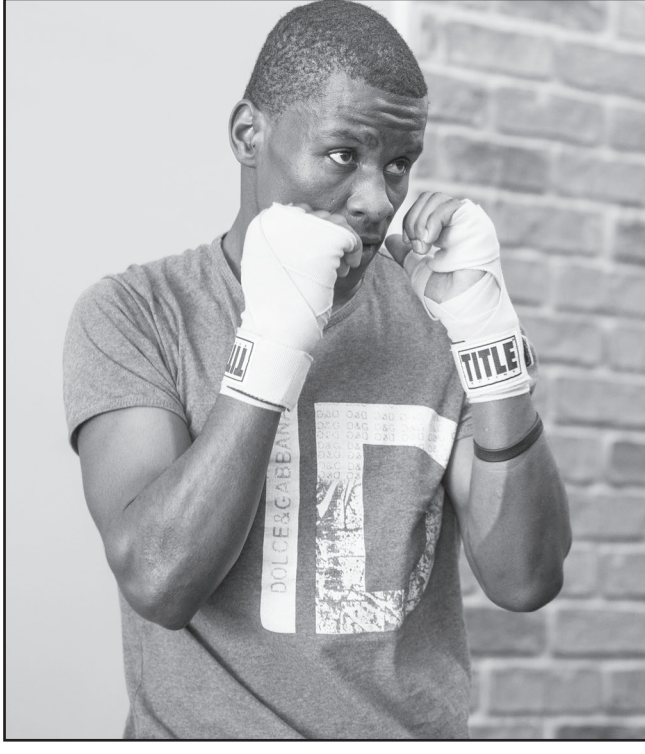

J. Lucky Henry, a fitness instructor at Title Boxing Club, said before the class that the students would be taken through a warm-up and then would be shown how to punch. They would engage in shadow punching and would go through a full-body workout.

After eight rounds of punching and combinations, he said they would do 15 minutes of ab and core work. He said everything in boxing is generated through the core. Kicking, punching, all of it comes from balance, Henry added.

Henry said anyone can take the class.

"It's not a competition with anybody," he said. "It's all based on yourself. What can you do with the amount of time you're given?"

Lynn school election snowed out

ELECTION
From A1

Voters are being asked to pay for a 652-student school to be built near Pine Grove Cemetery on Parkland Avenue. A second facility to serve 1,008 students would be constructed on McManus Field on Commercial Street.

If approved, property owners will be responsible for $91.4 million of the total $188.5 million project cost. School officials said $11 million in contingency funds are included in the overall calculations. If those monies are not used, officials said it would reduce the taxpayer portion by that amount, making the taxpayers' bill about $80 million. City officials say the average homeowner would pay from $200-$275 a year extra on their real estate tax bill for the next 25 years.

Donald Castle, a founding member of Protect Our Reservoir — Preserve Pine Grove, a grassroots organization founded to fight the ballot question, said his group will spend the extra week before the election to convince residents to vote no.

"The fight continues," he said. "We will keep organizing to oppose this."

In a filing to the city on campaign spending, Two Schools for Lynn, the group organized to support the project, reported they raised $11,055 from Jan. 31 through Feb. 24. Much of the cash, $5,000, came from the Lynn Teachers Association. Public officials also made donations. City Councilor and state Rep.

Daniel Cahill contributed $500, the mayor wrote a check for $200, City Councilor Brian LaPierre gave $450 and City Councilor Buzzy Barton donated $200.

The group opposing the ballot initiative, Protect Our Reservoir — Preserve Pine Grove, failed to file on time. Castle said the report was in the mail and estimated the group raised about $7,000.

Goudreau keeps on rockin' in Swampscott

GOUDREAU
From A1

Goudreau's songwriting talent, which had produced more than 100 songs in the past 40 years, had been pretty much dormant since his last album, 2003's "Delp and Goudreau." Brad Delp, Boston's lead singer, had been Goudreau's writing partner for 25 years.

"I wrote the music and Brad wrote the lyrics," Goudreau said. When Delp died in 2007, Goudreau lost not only his brother-in-law/close friend/creative partner, but the spirit to write.

He continued playing guitar in different venues, performing alongside blues titan James Montgomery, the American Vinyl All Star Band and other musicians. But Goudreau wasn't inspired to write a single song.

The last song he was involved with was "Rock in Away," which he had written in 2006 with Delp, both as a nod to fans for Boston's 30th anniversary as well as a failed attempt to reconcile with the band's founder, Tom Scholz. Goudreau performed the song, with Brian Maes, another Lynn native, on vocals, at Brad Delp's Memorial Concert, Come Together, in Boston on Aug. 19, 2007.

Everything changed, unexpectedly, last March at the Hard Rock in Hollywood, Fla., when Goudreau was invited to sit in by blues/rock guitarist Jonny Lang, who was part of the Hendrix Experience Tour band. The evening turned out to be a life-altering experience.

"I looked around and everyone was younger than I was, and I had this epiphany," Goudreau said. "We were playing blues-rock, which had been my original love, and we got a standing ovation. After the show, I was walking through the hall and so many people recognized me and were enthusiastically high-fiving me. It was then I realized this is what I should be doing. I left like an older statesman, but I also felt like I had finally come home."

Indeed, Goudreau had fallen in love with blues-rock music in 1966, when he saw Michael Bloomfield playing guitar in the Paul Butterfield Blues Band. "That introduced me to the blues, and I learned how to play lead guitar blues based on that band," Goudreau said.

"Later in the '60s and early '70s, a bunch of different British acts took traditional American blues and turned them around with big drum sounds and big guitar sounds. Groups like Jeff Beck and Led Zeppelin were re-inventing that music, and that style of playing was exciting. With Eric Clapton and Cream, most of their music was traditional blues that they redid in their own style, and that kicked up things for me."

Goudreau was 17 when he first saw Cream and heard Eric Clapton playing his Gibson SG guitar through a Marshall amp. "I knew that moment that I had to have that guitar," he recalled. "And within a matter of months, I had bought my first Gibson SG, which is the guitar people still link me to. The amplifier was expensive, so I had to wait a bit and finally got a used one for $1,000, which was a lot of money. But that is still the equipment I use today."

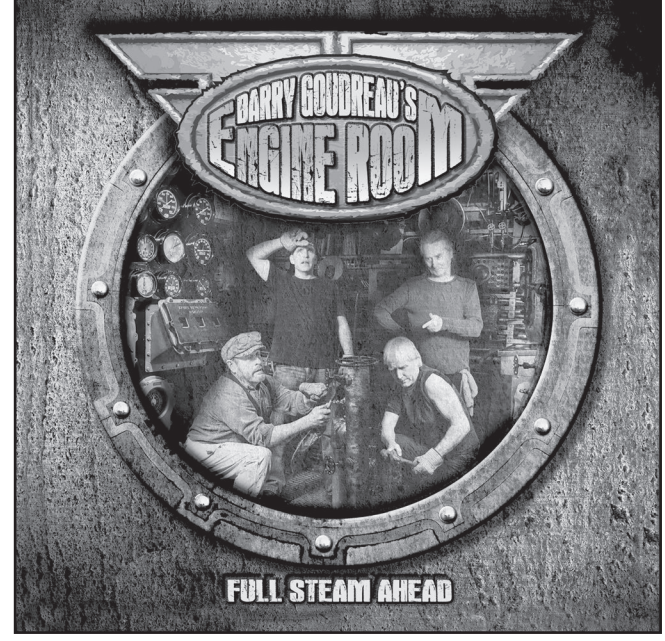

When Goudreau played with Boston, however, he had gone off in a different direction, playing more straight-ahead rock. But after his appearance in Florida with Lang and the Hendrix Experience, he was suddenly back where he felt he had always belonged.

As soon as he got back home, Goudreau called Maes, a successful vocalist and keyboard player in Lynn and his former bandmate in two of his bands with Delp, Orion the Hunter and RTZ.

"It just seemed like the path of least resistance to go to the people I knew and had worked with, to see if this would work," Goudreau said. "When I called up Brian and told him that I wanted to start a new band in the style of the records we loved in the late '60s and early '70s, like with Jeff Beck, Led Zeppelin and Humble Pie, he immediately said it sounded great and he was in."

When Maes phoned to say they should get together the next week and get it going, Goudreau felt pure exhilaration. "But then I realized I did not have one note of music written," he said. "So I sat down with my iPhone and thought about what songs I enjoyed playing in the past, and the feel of those songs, and put a bunch of ideas on the phone."

By the end of the week, Goudreau had successfully enlisted another of his former bandmates, Tim Archibald, a bassist who had played with Maes in Peter Wolf's Houseparty Five and had been a member of RTZ. He also had come up with a bunch of ideas. There had been no whole songs when Goudreau had met with Maes, there was an abundance of kernels of ideas for songs, along with a bunch of rhythmic feels and chord changes and guitar riffs.

When the three former bandmates got together, joined by "Old" Tony Di-pietro on drums, it didn't take long to know they were onto something. For Goudreau, it was especially powerful.

"Brad had been my only writing partner and everything I wrote was with him," he said. "But right away I saw that Brian was able to fill that void. He wrote the lyrics and I wrote the music. I couldn't have been more surprised that I could come up with so many ideas for songs so quickly."

It was full steam ahead for Barry Goudreau's Engine Room. Maes recorded tracks in his home studio while Goudreau recorded all the guitar parts in his home studio. Using a late '60s style, the band added three female vocalists (MaryBeth Maes, Terri O'Soro and Joanie Cicalati) singing backup on nine of the 11 songs on the album.

One of the most powerful songs on the album is the last one, "Keeping the Faith." "I wrote that song in the fall of 2016, during a particularly trying time in my professional life," Goudreau said.

Goudreau admits he never expected the album to come together so quickly, especially given Maes' crazy-busy schedule. "The main songwriting was done in the first couple of months but Brian's a full-time musician who gives lessons every day and is busy with kids' groups as well. Most nights he plays out as solo or in different bands," Goudreau said.

Goudreau and his mates are ready to share the new music with fans at Lynn Auditorium on April 22. John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band and Charlie Farren will open.

"The concert will be really exciting for me, since for the first time in a decade I will be playing music from all the different projects I have done," Goudreau said. "Some songs are from Boston, as well as from my solo record in 1980, from Orion the Hunter and 'The Rhythm Won't Stop' from Delp and Goudreau."

After performing in Lynn, Goudreau said the band will play small theaters and venues throughout New England. Compared to the Boston tours, which played stadiums and huge concert halls in America, including a sold-out concert in Madison Square Garden, and London, Japan, Sweden, Norway, France, Denmark and Germany, this is quite a change.

But to Goudreau, it is a welcome change.

"At this stage of my life, having been through a lot personally and musically, I feel quite seasoned. Right now, I feel as if I have come back to my roots, and am exactly where I want to be, doing exactly what I want to be doing. Playing my new album at the Lynn Auditorium couldn't be more perfect."

Local author self publishes first novel

LYNN — Lina Rehal, local author and freelance writer, has self-published her first novel, "Loving Daniel." The contemporary romance is the first book in her Tucker's Landing series about people in a small coastal town in Massachusetts.

Rehal describes the book as: "Romance writer, Grace Madden, stumbles across an old journal and a stack of letters from the man who shattered her dreams when he returned from Iraq, broke their engagement and left Massachusetts with no explanation. Reading his letters brings back the unanswered question of why he broke up with her. Memories she tucked away in a corner of her heart, more than two decades ago, resurface. Realizing she never got over him, the well-known author tries to find closure. She writes 'Loving Daniel' to tell the story she's kept inside of her all these years.

Lina Rehal's new novel, "Loving Daniel."

"When Aidan McRae reads it, he is convinced the story is about him and has to know why she wrote it. He learns she's doing an author event at a bookstore near his home in Maine and plans a surprise visit. He persuades her to have lunch with him. Hoping to find her answer, she accepts his invitation to spend the next day in Ogunquit, the small coastal town they visited as kids. An innocent kiss leads to feelings neither of them can deny."

The event will also feature a ribbon cutting for the library's new play space. Families are encouraged to have children dress in their pajamas and to bring a new stuffed animal to donate to A Bed for Every Child and/or a pair of pajamas to donate to the Boston Bruins and Cradles to Crayons.

"We appreciate first lady Baker's friendship and support of the library, and applaud her passion for social responsibility through her work to increase awareness and raise funds with a number of causes for children, education, health and social services," said library director Alyce Deveau. "We know that she loves to read to children, and are looking forward to hearing her share this special book with children and their families."

"For over 100 years, the Swampscott Public Library has played a major role in the early, formative years of so many children in our community, and we remember fondly our trips with our own children and their friends as they were growing up," said Baker. "It is important we share our passion for reading with our children, and I look forward to celebrating with the Swampscott Public Library as they open a new and welcoming space for future generations to come and enjoy."

Whoopi Goldberg didn't criticize SEAL's widow

NEW YORK (AP) — Whoopi Goldberg didn't say the widow of a Navy SEAL "was just looking for attention" during an emotional appearance at President Donald Trump's address to Congress last month, despite a widely shared website article that quotes Goldberg criticizing the woman. The Underground

Report, which produced the online article, says it fabricates stories to satirize Trump supporters. Its site states it produces stories that "are not based in reality."

Lauri Hogan, a spokeswoman for ABC, told The Associated Press that Goldberg, who co-hosts ABC's "The View," never said the remarks attributed to her in the article.

Carryn Owens received a standing ovation after she was introduced by Trump during the Feb. 28 speech at the Capitol. She is the wife of Chief Petty Officer William "Ryan" Owens, who was killed in a late January raid in Yemen.

During the March 1 episode of "The View," Goldberg was critical of Trump's approval of the raid and she posed the question of whether his introducing the widow during his speech was "a tribute" or "damage control."

KATIE MORRISON Snow has other plans for Spartans

Isn't that the way things go? It's been a mild winter with few debilitating snowstorms. I'm sure this year's high school seniors have been dissatisfied with the number of snow days they've racked up during their final year. And for sports reporters (and probably athletic directors as well), we've been pretty lucky. There hasn't been much scrambling to find out when games are being made up or many days when the entire slate of games gets wiped out.

But here we are. We were a day away from one of the biggest games of the year, as the St. Mary's boys basketball team was set to play Cathedral (for the second straight year) at TD Garden in the Division 4 state semifinal.

I don't want to speak for the players, but the vibe I get is that this game means every bit as much as the state title game, and a big reason for that is getting to play on the same hardwood as the Celtics would play on the very next night. The atmosphere at last year's St. Mary's-Cathedral matchup at the Garden was electric, even though each school could bring its entire student body and it still would only fill a couple of sections. And the game was one

MORRISON, B2

Due to the impending storm forecast for today, the St. Mary's-Cathedral Division 4 boys basketball state semifinal game will be moved to Wednesday.

The game will be played at Woburn High School Wednesday as the nightcap of a boy-girl Division 4 EMass doubleheader, with the Fenway-Cathedral girls at 5:30 and St. Mary's-Cathedral boys at 7:15.

Spartans blank Andover to win Division 1 North

LOWELL — St. Mary's senior goalie Andrew LoRusso stood on his head for a full 45 minutes on Monday night as the No. 6 Spartans shut out No. 4 Andover, 2-0, in the Division 1 North final at the Tsongas Center.

LoRusso chalked up an impressive 27 saves in the shutout win, and St. Mary's coach Mark Lee said LoRusso's stellar play has been crucial to this year's run.

"We wouldn't be here without him," he said. "He came up huge in double overtime against North Reading to start the tournament, and that's what you need, performances like that. I wouldn't want to have any other goaltender than this guy."

Senior captain Mike Zampanti and sophomore Colin Reddy each had one goal and one assist in the win, while senior captain Andrew Creamer and junior Anthony Bono each had one assist.

The Spartans jumped all over Andover to open up the game. They took the first five shots on goal of the game, eventually outshooting the Golden Warriors, 14-5, in the first period.

LOWELL — In hockey, some fans will say that you're only as strong as your goalie. Monday night at the Tsongas Arena, the St. Mary's boys hockey team proved that adage to be true.

The Spartans, behind a 27-save performance from goalie Andrew LoRusso, defeated Andover, 2-0, in Monday night's Division 1 North final. The victory gives the Spartans a spot in Sunday's state final at TD Garden, where they'll skate against Framingham, who won Division 1 South.

The story of the game, without question, was LoRusso's performance in net. The Golden Warriors tested LoRusso, a senior, throughout the night, but he held his ground every time. That came as no surprise to his coach. "You don't get to the finals unless you have some quality

Peabody's Manganiello emerges as leader for Gordon lacrosse

By Joshua Kummins
FOR THE ITEM

A new era is underway for the Gordon College men's lacrosse team.

With 14 new players on the roster after a 1-14 season in 2016, there is no player head coach Warren Shumate wanted to be a leader for his group than Peabody's Nico Manganiello.

"We have some good seniors on the team who lead as well, but the team knew and I knew that Nico was going to be a captain of this team at some point," Shumate said. "People just want to be around him."

Gordon has four captains, with Manganiello the only junior in that group.

A product of Hebron Academy in Maine, Manganiello is off to another great start on the field. He scored five goals in the Fighting Scots' season-opening win over Maine Maritime and has totaled nine on the season, including two in their most recent contests against Salem State, an 8-6 win, and Mount Ida, a 15-11 loss.

"I've been working on my shot the most," Manganiello said. "I'm definitely trying to take better angle shots and more overhand shots. I think it starts with me being a captain, so if I shoot overhand then everyone else has to. That really helps us get more shots on net as a team, and shots that are harder to stop."

It may still be early in the season, but Manganiello is already diving head-first into his new leadership role. He was an important player on the field right from the start of his career up in Wenham, combining for 52 goals and 73 points over his first two seasons. He scored 29 goals as a freshman to rank fourth on the team, while finishing last season with 23 slotted him up to third.

The Fighting Scots entered the week and Monday's game at Becker, their third-to-last contest before Commonwealth Coast Conference (CCC) play, with a 2-2 record.

As Manganiello's high school career came to an end, Gordon and nearby rival Endicott were atop his list of colleges. Shumate's mission and the opportunity to play right away while helping to rebuild a program were important considerations.

"I definitely think that experience helped me grow as a player more," Manganiello said. "I think it does help me play and lead as a junior because I see freshmen come in and I see putting a little pressure on them. I can see myself in them since I know what they're going through, so it makes it easier for me to talk to them."

On a similar note, there has been a lot of leading to do with last season's significant roster turnover. Thus, being named a captain as a junior was rewarding and an opportunity that Manganiello wanted.

"I was definitely really excited to be named a captain as a junior," he said. "I knew it would come with a lot of pressure that I had to take forth, and I like that. I was always told that pressure makes diamonds, so if you were to put me in that situation I think I'd excel more in that situation."

From an on-field perspective, Shumate agrees that Manganiello's responsibility has increased with his years. Now that he's an upperclassman, all the eyes look in his direction. Improving his shot has led to goals early in the season, but it's an up-tempo style that makes him most effective with the Scots.

"I always tell guys to enjoy (being a freshman or sophomore) because there's no pressure," said Shumate, who returned to guide his alma mater in 2009. "As a junior or senior, players, and Andover did," St. Mary's coach Mark Lee said. "Like he (LoRusso) did last year, and he's doing this year, he's played very well in the tournament. The bigger the game, the better he plays. To get a shutout in the North final is just an example of what he's capable of."

Although he notched a shutout win, the night started with a minor scare for LoRusso. Andover's first shot of the night hit the crossbar, but that only served as an alarm for the netminder.

"That first shot of the night kind of woke me up," LoRusso said. "I knew right away that Andover was going to shoot high so I focused on that for the rest of the game."

LoRusso, who started at goalie last year when the Spartans lost in the state final, credited his forwards for helping him keep Andover from finding the net.

"I couldn't have done it without my forwards," LoRusso said. "Those guys in front of me, they blocked the shots and the pucks outside. I made the saves I had to make, but I couldn't have done it without my forwards."

LoRusso came into his final campaign hoping to get another shot at a state title. Given that the Spartans fell to Franklin, 4-3, in a double-overtime heartbreaker in last year's state final, the Spartans have played with extra incentive throughout the year.

"It's meaningful because he was in net at the Garden last year when we lost in double-overtime," Lee said. "I think he probably has a little incentive going on right now. I'm just very happy for him and I'm happy for the entire team. They worked very hard and they deserve it."

To make the shutout win even more memorable, LoRusso's family was in the stands to witness the goalie's performance.

"It's huge. My whole entire family came down and watched me and they usually don't do that," LoRusso said. "It's a very meaningful moment."

Now that the Spartans are one win away from erasing last season's sour memories, LoRusso's confident that he and his teammates have peaked at the perfect moment.

"The last couple practices we've really come together

St. Mary's put constant pressure on the Andover defense, getting multiple quality scoring chances on Andover goalie Zach Laramie.

The pressure paid off with about seven minutes left in the first period. After taking over the puck in their own zone, the Spartans pushed it up ice when Kreamer sent a pass up ice to Zampanti along the right side. Zampanti sent a saucer pass over a defender's stick into the slot, where Reddy was streaking toward the net. Reddy took the puck, deked left and flicked a shot past Laramie to take a 1-0 lead.

"We know that they have a quality goaltender, so we wanted to get as many shots to the net as possible," said Lee. "Luckily, we were able to put one in early, but we knew they weren't going to go away after that."

Andover seemed to get its legs under itself in the second period, completely turning the tables on the Spartans in time of possession. The Golden Warriors outshot St. Mary's, 12-3, in the period, but a combination of a lot of near misses and some great play from LoRusso kept Andover off the board to keep the score at 1-0 heading into the third period.

The Golden Warriors continued to pound the net into the third period, but LoRusso stood tall. After 11 third-period saves for the senior goalie and an empty-net goal from Zampanti, the Spartans skated away with the 2-0 win.

Next up for St. Mary's is an unfamiliar opponent in Division 1 South champion Framingham (16-6-4). Luckily for the Spartans, they have a few days to study up.

"We don't know a whole lot about them, so we'll have to do some homework," said Lee. "We've got a few days now to try to get familiar with them, so hopefully when the time comes we'll have plenty of knowledge."

There's also an element of redemption on the minds of many St. Mary's players after a gut wrenching double-overtime loss to Franklin in last year's state title game.

"I think it's there," said Lee. "When you lose in double overtime in the state title game, it burns you for a year. Most of the kids are back from last year, and we really had a goal to get back here this year, so this one is special."

St. Mary's and Framingham will drop the puck at the TD Garden on Sunday at 5:45 p.m. with the Division 1 state championship on the line.

Red Sox pitchers making progress

DUNEDIN, Fla. (AP) — The Boston Red Sox had a good day on the mound.

Reigning AL Cy Young Award winner Rick Porcello threw five scoreless innings Monday in an intrasquad game, five days after being struck on the pitching hand by a batted ball.

Also, David Price is making progress in his recovery from a sore left elbow, and knuckleballer Steven Wright went two hitless innings against Toronto in his first exhibition start after missing the final month last season due to a right shoulder strain.

Porcello was hit on the thumb by Yoanis Cespedes' fourth-inning grounder during his start Wednesday against a New York Mets' split squad.

"Threw the ball very well," Boston manager John Farrell said after the Red Sox lost 4-3 to the Blue Jays. "Got up to 75 pitches. No ill effects from the comebacker the other day against the Mets. A good day, a positive work day for Rick."

In his outing at Boston's complex in Fort Myers, Florida, Porcello struck out six. He was 22-4 with a 3.15 ERA last season.

Farrell said Price has been doing range-of-motion drills and throwing into a net in a batting cage for the past few days. There is no date yet for when Price will get on a mound.

"Feels good again," Farrell said. "Given the situation, he's in a good place right now. The main thrust is still the rehabbing and strengthening, and getting his arm moving."

Entering the second year of a $217 million, seven-year contract, Price reported elbow soreness the day after a two-inning, 38-pitch simulated game on Feb. 28. He met with Drs. James Andrews and Neal ElAttrache on March 3.

Wright, a first-time AL All-Star last year, retired six of seven Toronto hitters. His lone baserunner reached on an error.

"It felt good to finally get back out there in a game situation," Wright said. "Definitely pleased with the outcome. A little more pleased with how I felt. Today was a huge step in the right direction."

Snow has other plans for Spartans for the ages, as St. Mary's won on its last possession.

MORRISON

This year, there's little doubt in my mind that the game will be just as exciting as it was in 2016, but thanks to the impending snowstorm, it won't have the same legendary setting.

Instead, the Spartans and Panthers will face off at Woburn High Wednesday night in the tail end of a girls and boys D4 doubleheader.

It's obviously understandable that the game can't be rescheduled at the Garden; with the venues out in Springfield booked for the eight championship games this coming weekend, time is of the essence when it comes to rescheduling these games. The Celtics host the Timberwolves Wednesday night, and rescheduling for Thursday leaves just one day in between games for the winners. So, the MIAA had to improvise.

But these kids play in high schools constantly. There's nothing particularly exciting about playing in another one. It sucks some of the excitement out of the game, at least while the disappointment of losing the chance to play at the Garden still stings. You wonder if there were no college venues or any other place that at least gives the kids the feeling of playing on a bigger stage.

But with all that being said, I hope this change of venue doesn't rain on the parade of any St. Mary's or Cathedral players, coaches, parents, families or friends. It will still be a thrilling game, if last year's was any indication of things to come. Cathedral has an offense that's averaged just over 100 points per game in its four tournament games, but will take on its toughest opponent yet in St. Mary's. I'm not sure which team will come out on top in the end, but I can almost guarantee the Panthers won't be breaking into triple digits against the Spartans.

There is one, albeit small, consolation, though. At least both teams have been there before. There are plenty of Spartans, and probably a few Panthers, that didn't make the trip to Legends Way last winter, but hopefully the majority of those kids are underclassmen who will have the chance again. And something tells me that when the game tips off Wednesday night, it won't matter much to either team where they're playing; they'll be laser-focused on getting the chance to play for the state title.

DeMarcus Ware decides to retire

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — DeMarcus Ware won't be returning to the Dallas Cowboys nor the Denver Broncos as expected. The 12-year NFL veteran is instead retiring from the NFL.

Ware announced his decision Monday on Twitter.

Next to a split image of the Cowboys and Broncos, Ware wrote, "After a lot of thought and prayer, I've decided to accept the unknown and retire from my NFL career. Tempting opportunities still present themselves for me to play and I feel better than I have in years. However, long-term health of quality of life outweigh the spark and passion to play that I once had."

Ware's decision is a shocker.

Just two months ago, he scoffed at those suggesting he might have played his last NFL game after he missed the Broncos' season finale to undergo lower back surgery.

Hours before Ware announced his retirement, Broncos general manager John Elway said, "He's going to test the market to see what's out there. I told him that's probably the best thing to do at this point in time and we'll stay in touch and see where he is."

After he announced his retirement, the Broncos tweeted, "See you in Canton."

"DeMarcus, you are the epitome of what an NFL player should be," Elway tweeted. "Congrats on your Hall of Fame career & thank you for becoming a Bronco!"

In his Twitter post, Ware thanked "all the people in my life who had a hand in molding me into a great player and the God fearing man I am today. I thank the Dallas Cowboys and Denver Broncos for opportunities to experience what greatness feels like."

Patriots sign lineman Lawrence Guy

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — The Patriots have made a move to fill some losses on defense this off-season with the signing of free agent lineman Lawrence Guy.

New England announced Guy's signing Monday, the latest addition in what's already been a busy free agent period for the Super Bowl champions.

Guy, 27, is a six-year NFL veteran, with stops in Green Bay, Indianapolis, San Diego and most recently Baltimore. He appeared in 16 games each of the past two seasons with the Ravens, with 5½ sacks over the span.

His addition will help fill the pass rushing void left following the free agency departure of Jabaal Sheard to the Colts, and the impending departure of Chris Long, who previously announced his intention to seek a new team this offseason.

Hightower leaves Jets meeting without deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Dont'a Hightower visited an AFC East rival — and left without a deal.

The New York Jets announced Monday that they met with the free agent linebacker, one of the most-coveted players available this offseason.

Hightower, who has helped the New England Patriots win two Super Bowls in his five NFL seasons, met with the Jets on Sunday and Monday, according to a person with direct knowledge of the situation. The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the team did not disclose details of the visit.

CBS Sports first reported Hightower's meeting with the Jets on Sunday night. ESPN reported on Monday that Hightower was next scheduled to visit the Pittsburgh Steelers. The NFL Network also reported that Hightower has already met with Tennessee.

The Jets, interested in signing the big free-agent prize away from their AFC East rival, apparently tried to pull out all the stops during their meeting. ESPN reported that Hightower, who turned 27 on Sunday, was taken out for dinner by the team and given birthday cupcakes to help celebrate. "Happy Birthday Dont'a Hightower" was shown on the screens inside the Jets' facility in Florham Park, New Jersey, and the team sent Hightower's mother some Jets merchandise.

It wasn't enough to get a deal done on the spot.

New England is also interested in bringing back Hightower, who has 372 tackles and 17 sacks since being a first-round pick out of Alabama in 2012. Hightower forced a fumble when he sacked Atlanta's Matt Ryan in the fourth quarter of the Super Bowl, helping swing the momentum New England's way in its comeback 34-28 overtime victory last month.

Hightower, selected for his first Pro Bowl last season, also had a big play in the Patriots' previous Super Bowl win two years

The UConn women's basketball team poses with the American Athletic Conference championship trophy after defeating South Florida.

UConn top seed in women's tournament

NEW YORK (AP) — UConn is the No.1 overall seed in the women's NCAA Tournament.

The Huskies' road to a fifth straight national championship will begin at home against 16th seed Albany on Saturday. A rematch from last season's title game with Syracuse looms in the second round. UConn potentially wouldn't have to leave the state of Connecticut until the Final Four in Dallas.

The NCAA switched the national semifinals back to a Friday-Sunday format this season for the first time since 2002.

While the Huskies won't have to leave the state until the national semifinals, the other No. 1 seeds aren't as lucky.

South Carolina is the top seed in Stockton, California. The Gamecocks are headed out of the Eastern time zone for the third time in four seasons. The Gamecocks' lone trip to the Final Four came when they played a regional in Greensboro in 2015.

UConn, which has won a record 11 national championships, is the prohibitive favorite to win again. Unlike the past few years where it almost seemed a foregone conclusion that UConn would win the title, the Huskies weren't the favorite coming into the season with big losses to graduation.

Geno Auriemma challenged his young team with a difficult schedule that saw the Huskies play most of the other top teams in the country, including potential No. 1 seeds Notre Dame, South Carolina and Baylor. Still, they did show some vulnerability with a single digit win over Maryland — the No. 3 seed in their region. UConn also only beat Tulane by three points in February, giving other teams hope that the Huskies are beatable.

Free agent linebacker Dont'a Hightower, who is meeting with teams this week, did not strike a deal with New York after meeting with the Jets.

ago. He tackled Seattle's Marshawn Lynch at the 1-yard line, and Malcolm Butler intercepted Russell Wilson on the next play to help seal the Patriots' 28-24 win.

Hightower will likely have several offers to consider, but the Jets' interest is intriguing. If they bring him in, it could spell the end of David Harris' time with the team. Harris is the Jets' longest-tenured player — he was a second-round pick in 2007 — but the 33-year-old linebacker is scheduled to count $6.5 million against New York's salary cap this season.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)

A financial opportunity looks promising. Invest in your skills, experience and drive to survive. Join forces with someone you trust, not with someone putting pressure on you to do things his or her way.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's efforts are never good enough for her family

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 15-year-old girl, and I'm struggling with abuse. I'm mentally and physically abused by my family constantly, yet they make me out to be the abusive one. I could do amazing on a test, and they yell at me for something that happened on the last one. They're always pushing me so hard to do better that it's making me do worse.

How can I make my family see that I'm not them, and I can do good if they just give me the chance to learn from my mistakes?

STRUGGLING IN WISCONSIN

DEAR STRUGGLING: Parents always want their children to perform to their level of capacity. Because you say you are being abused physically and emotionally for your inability to live up to your family's expectations, discuss what's going on with a counselor at your school. It's possible there needs to be an intervention by someone they will listen to. Please don't wait to do it.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Contact Dear Abby at DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

DEAR ABBY: My husband of three years has visits with his son every Tuesday and Thursday evening. My mother-in-law picks up her grandson, takes him to her home and makes dinner for the three of them. I work 10-hour days Monday through Friday and am not able to attend these dinners.

My question is, isn't it proper etiquette that my mother-in-law should send a plate of food home for me with my husband? She never has, and I think this is rude and inconsiderate of her. What is your opinion?

HUNGRY IN EL PASO

DEAR HUNGRY: Although brief, your letter speaks volumes about your relationship with your mother-in-law, which appears could be better. No rule of etiquette dictates that she is obligated to send a plate of her food home with her son for you. Perhaps if your relationship with her was warmer, or your husband was thoughtful enough to suggest it, she would. However, since you asked, my opinion is that rather than complain, you should pick up some take-out on your way home from work.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 22-year-old college student on the verge of graduating this May. I've been dating my boyfriend for more than five years, and I am extremely close with his family, especially his sister "Claudia" and her three children (ages 6, 3 and 6 months).

My parents are throwing me a graduation party at their home, and they don't want any guests under the age of 10. How do I tell Claudia — a dear friend — that her children won't be invited without upsetting her? (I have small cousins who won't be attending either.)

It truly is nothing personal, but I know she will probably take it personally. I don't want to cause drama, but I do want to honor my parents' wishes that no small children be present. How do I tell her? Help!

SOON-TO-BE GRADUATE

DEAR SOON-TO-BE GRADUATE: You are not hosting the party; your parents are. As the hosts, it is their privilege to decide whom to invite — or not. When Claudia is invited, your parents should explain that they prefer children under the age of 10 not be present, and soften it if necessary by explaining there are small nieces and nephews who will not be attending as well.

BRIDGE

Over one no-trump a singleton may help

Three people provide more quotes for this column than any others: Mark Twain, Oscar Wilde and today's contributor, A.N. Anonymous: "A single fact can spoil a good argument."

At the bridge table, the fact of a single-ten can make the difference between reaching a low-count slam and missing it. Look at the North hand in the diagram. South opens one no-trump. How should North plan the auction?

With only 11 high-card points, perhaps your first thought is that game is the limit. However, there is a good argument that if the singleton diamond is worthwhile, there could be a slam. North should transfer with two hearts, then jump to four diamonds. (Since a three-diamond rebid would be natural and game-forcing, four diamonds can be used as a splinter bid.)

South's trumps are not great, but the rest of his hand is slam suitable. He could make a four-heart control-bid or use Roman Key Card Blackwood so that he can find out in particular about North's spade honors.

How should South play in six spades after West leads the diamond queen?

Declarer can afford to lose only one major-suit trick. But he has two ways to play the trump suit. If he can afford one loser, he should start with the ace. But if he cannot afford a loser, he should finesse the queen. How does he know which way to turn?

South should take the heart finesse first. Here, it loses, so he finesses the spade queen and gets home ... unless West is very clever and ducks his heart king. Then declarer might go down. If he does, he should congratulate West on his excellent defense ... through gritted teeth, to be sure!

Squatters' urban garden comes to life with pope's tacit approval

By Nicole Winfield ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Dozens of families have started tilling the soil and planting their first crops as a squatters' gardening initiative takes root on Catholic Church-owned land with the tacit blessing of Pope Francis. The not-entirely-legal urban garden that has sprung up on the eastern periphery of Rome is the brainchild of Omero Lauri, a longtime activist in the capital's squatting scene. In 2014, he occupied the St. Mary Major basilica for three weeks with 50 families who had been evicted from an abandoned building they had taken over. For the past four years, Lauri and his friends have been working the 37 acres of abandoned land they occupied at Tor Tre Teste. They cleared it of garbage and rocks, installed a well-fed irrigation system and turned the land into fertile plots that Lauri has been handing over for free — with a nominal 30 euro a year inscription fee — to needy families to farm.

"We believe that all people have the right to a piece of land for free," Lauri told the newest families to the project Sunday after assigning them their plots by lottery. The only hitch is that the land isn't Lauri's to give. It belongs to the Chapter of St. Mary Major, the college of priests who serve the Vatican basilica of the same name (and the same which Lauri occupied) and manage its assets. A few months after occupying the land in 2013, Lauri and his friends met with Francis when he celebrated Mass at a nearby parish and discussed Rome's chronic shortage of affordable housing and land for the poor. Francis, who celebrates the fourth anniversary of his pontificate Monday, has made the poor, the unemployed and the "peripheries" a major focus of his ministry, taking particular care of Rome's homeless and down and out. Three weeks after meeting with the squatters, Francis recalled in his weekly Sunday prayer that Jesus wasn't born in a house but a barnyard stall. "Today I think ... about all those families without homes, either because they never had one or because they lost it for whatever reason," he said Dec. 22, 2013. Soon thereafter he asked his chief alms-giver, Monsignor Konrad Krajewski, to get in touch with Lauri and keep tabs on the garden project. Since then, Lauri has provided Krajewski with regular updates about the organic initiative, though he is still seeking the coveted documentation that would regularize what is essentially an illegal occupation and use of private land.

Hermes goes hipster at downtown Los Angeles fashion event for men

By Nicole Evatt ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Luxury brand Hermes headed to downtown Los Angeles on Thursday for a hipster party complete with an outdoor runway show, interactive displays, food trucks and an indie concert. The Paris-based fashion house joins a growing number of brands staging flashy California shows outside of the traditional fashion weeks held in New York, Paris or Milan. "Why come to LA?" mused Robert Chavez, the president and CEO of Hermes North America. "We have a significant business here on the West Coast. Los Angeles is really the center of that business. ... And it was time for us to come downtown. We love the concept of being casual, chic, cool, innovative and surprising." Hermes decked out a block of empty warehouses to showcase their spring-summer menswear collection, which had previously shown in Paris. The laid-back line, perfect for a day at the beach, included comfy T-shirts, shorts and light jackets in neutral colors with occasional pops of neon yellow. "You're going to see really some beautiful, fresh, spring colors," Chavez said before the show. "You're going to see an easiness and casualness that is really going to epitomize the lifestyle of Southern California."

Making autonomous car play, Intel offers $15B for Mobileye

DETROIT — Computer chip maker Intel paid handsomely for a piece of the next big thing Monday as it offered more than $15 billion for Mobileye, an Israeli company at the forefront of autonomous vehicle technology.

The purchase, scheduled to close by year’s end, creates another major player in self-driving technology as traditional automakers and tech companies vie to put the cars into public use. Most companies have predicted autonomous vehicles will be carrying people in the next three-to-five years.

The big investment by Intel validates predictions that autonomous cars will someday come in large numbers, signifying a sea change in the way we all get around, said Timothy Carone, a Notre Dame University professor who has written about the future of automation. “Major players are finding ways to position themselves for a change as seminal as the personal computer revolution,” he said.

Jerusalem-based Mobileye, which makes software that processes information from cameras and other car sensors to decide where the cars should steer, has products on just about every automaker’s autonomous test fleet. The combination with Intel adds hardware, more software expertise and data centers that the companies say will hasten deployment of autonomous technology, including wider use of automatic emergency braking and other technologies that already are on the roads.
