Aunt's memory issues put her family at a crossroads

DEAR CONCERNED:

Close family members are typically the first to notice memory issues or cognitive decline, but often they are hesitant to say something even when they know something is wrong. A recent Alzheimer’s Association survey found that nearly 4 Americans say talking to a close family member about memory loss, thinking problems or other cognitive decline would be challenging. Initiating these challenging conversations is important. Discussion can enable early diagnosis, which is important to effective treatment, including better care management, more time for critical care planning and providing guidance individu...

On the surface, carmakers have staked a heavy bet on the rebound of the U.S. auto industry. But months after U.S. auto plants kicked back up, there is still a lot of uncertainty in the marketplace.

New car prices, for example, have been rising, and retailers have been struggling to keep up with demand. Dealerships are reporting long wait times for new vehicles, and some are even offering incentives to clear out inventory.

Meanwhile, automakers are facing challenges on the supply chain front. Chip shortages have persisted throughout the year, and the situation has only worsened as the delta variant of COVID-19 spread.

Despite these challenges, automakers are working to increase production and meet demand. They are also investing in new technologies and sustainability initiatives to stay competitive in the industry.

The future of the auto industry remains uncertain, but the recent developments show that it is bouncing back from the pandemic.
